verdict has been delivered by a criminal court.

As to the first argument, he continued, the very fact that most of the country have courts of the country have courts of Honour, makes proper and strict supervision on the part of the courts of the state imperative, lest private bodies penetrate into prohibited bounds. It is in the interests of both "the accused" and the public, he said, that criminal cases and punitive measures not be taken out of the trustworthy hands of the competent authorities.

Insofar as the accused 's concerned, his basic rights are protected by the criminal courts. On the other hand, a cursory glance at the rules of the appellant cooperative reveal that such elementary rights as that of being presented by a lawyer, of having his case tried in public and of having his witnesses properly examined are denied him.
